What is a Patient-Centered Medical Home?

Patient-centered medical homes provide care with an emphasis on the physician-patient relationship. They provide personalized, efficient, and comprehensive care while continuing to emphasize the personal relationship between patients, families, and their physician. Physicians in offices with the patient-centered medical home designation lead care teams that embody these values. This includes meeting the patient's needs for preventative care, care of chronic medical conditions, 24-hour physician access, providing quick responses to acute illness, and coordination of care with associated subspecialists. One of the main goals of the program is to facilitate the patient's ability to take a more active role in their care.
